

I know why you're all here today, and I thank you all for joining me. Now let us discuss the topic at hand, my review of Lady Gaga's newest country album Joanne. And I must say it is quite splendid to hear something so out of left field and not at all what we expected. Lady Gaga could have written more cannon fodder pop, and I wouldn't blame her, but I wouldn't care for it. But this album, she nailed it! It has singles, it has ballads, it has originality and authenticity. It has Florence Welch! I mean, her real name is Stefani Joanne Angelina Germanotta, and she names her album, Joanne? How cool is that? It like a whole different side to her to explore. I've listened to it again, and again, and I think this album's iPod worthy, and I haven't said that since The Fame Monster. Lady Gaga's Joanne is pure awesome sauce, and I give it two thumbs up!

In other news, the election happened. And thank god it is over. I hit election fatigue eight months ago, but then I had to listen to it for eight more months still up until now. And finally I can stop wasting my precious hours on this issue. I'm sick of it. I'm burnt out. This burnout's going to last a long time, like four years more or less. If I had my way, both of the presidential nominees would stay out of my sights. But no, I have to settle for one of the two. Sadly, it was the wrong one. Or was it a right one? Very tricky thing about predictions, if you take one side and come out of it on the wrong side, you look like a complete fool.

There's a lot to take away from history in the making. The great thing is he did it, the president-elect did it spending less than half the money and a quarter of the time as his opponent. That's a Cinderella story bigger than March Madness. That's the kind of fiscal spending conservative penny-pinchers love. Taking away the context of the winner already being set for life and his next dozen generations.

The sad thing is the election wasn't even competitive. Do you know when was the last time the losing nominee won the popular vote? It was in 2000, when Al Gore lost to Dubya, because Florida went to Bush by less than 1 percent. One state made the difference. That was a competitive election. Not only was this election an "upset", it was an absolute shellacking. Because Hillary lost Florida, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Wisconsin, Michigan, Iowa. She lost Iowa! IOWA! Iowa's so liberal, it legalized gay marriage in 2009, six years before the supreme court! HOW DO YOU LOSE IOWA, a state full of Illinois transplants and middle class small business owners to the BILLIONAIRE!?

What's there to say about Donald Trump that hasn't already been said? You hear one joke about his hair, you've heard them all I say. I'm telling you, Donald's a lunatic. I'm telling you, Donald's a bum, I'm telling you, Donald's a chauvinist. And I'm here to dispel some of those notions.

I'm not saying Donald Trump is the embodiment of clickbait. But I wouldn't be surprised if Donald Trump dressed up during Halloween as Hitler, because that's exactly what everybody thinks he would be. Either that or a redneck. Or a Confederate. I'm taking a selfie, where's Paula Deen!?

I'm not saying Donald Trump is literally Hitler, but I wouldn't be surprised if Donald killed me off like Negan did to Glenn. If Donald Trump could execute the only token Asian that exists in American pop culture, he wouldn't hesitate! Oh well, at least I still have Fresh Off The Boat.

I'm not saying Donald Trump is literally Hitler, but I wouldn't be surprised if Donald decided to kick me out and send me back to wherever it is I came from. Nebraska. Or is it Japan? Donald couldn't say, they all looked the same to him.

I'm not saying Donald Trump is literally Hitler, but I wouldn't be surprised if Donald decided to incarcerate me in an internment camp like Franklin Delano Roosevelt did after Pearl Harbor. It's okay though. After it is all and settled, and I can reintegrate with society, he can compensate me with 20,000 for all those years of imprisonment. I always knew he was a cheap skate.

I'm not saying Donald Trump is un-American, but I wouldn't be surprised if Donald decided to burn the American flag and desecrate its image, because that's about as un-American as it gets. And Donald Trump is certainly un-American.

And I'm not saying Hillary Clinton would make a better president than Donald Trump, I do not discuss hypotheticals. But even if she could, the president isn't decided by what's best for America, it's decided by who ran the best campaign. And it is clear who did that in spades.

I'm not saying Hillary Clinton is equally as unintelligent, but I wouldn't be surprised if Hillary Clinton called every non-supporter deplorable as if doing so would win her even more favors from the people already voting for her. She went to law school, but somehow she doesn't understand the concept of burning bridges.

I'm not saying Hillary Clinton is equally as unlikable, but I wouldn't be surprised if Hillary ever starred in an NBC hit television show for 14 seasons over a decade which is still running to this day. Maybe she should've instigated an endearing birther movement just to maintain traction.

I'm not saying Hillary Clinton is literally Kim Jong-Un, but I wouldn't be surprised if Hillary has an establishment comprised of senior government officials bending the rules to her whim and manipulating all of her public appearances. "Here's an idea, Hillary. Let's not make a public appearance in Wisconsin. You only have 365 days a year, and there's 50 states. Let's visit everywhere else and let Barney Frank handle Wisconsin. Good idea, evil corporate mastermind."

And I'm not saying all of these points sarcastically as if I don't really believe Donald Trump is terrible. I do genuinely believe that Donald Trump is terrible for America. But my outlandishness in an attempt to villify him has backfired so terribly, all I've done is caricaturized him to the point that moderates won't even care about my opinion, because they can't discern between fact and fiction. It's all a bunch of smoke in their eyes. Meanwhile, there's nothing cartoonish about Hillary Clinton, you know what baggage she's carrying. The Middle East grew more unstable under her tenure as Secretary of State, the cybersecurity threat is clearly an issue she can't handle properly, and the Democratic National Committee and Wall Street is in cahoots with her. The swing voters definitely paid attention when Hillary's name came under fire. Of course, in comparison, Donald Trump experienced a wildfire of ridicule, but it's unclear how much of it is real. In my opinion, they're both villains in my eyes. That's why I conscientiously abstained from voting for either of them. And they deserve absolutely every insult coming their way.

So roast them, just stop comparing them to Hitler, because that worked well as of late.
